REFLECTIONS IN FAMILY MEDICINE

LOST..... (Reflection on Alzheimer Disease)

Vikram Arora, MD, MPH

The light is getting dim,
and the night is near.
Another priceless moment
will soon disappear.

Faces that I once loved
no longer they seem Clear,
Time has lost its meaning to me
Life itself has become unfamiliar.

I need someone to guide me through this night in a strange land
A light to show me the way, from Someone who may understand

That,
 My thoughts are not with me
 but I still have my pride . . .
 My memories might be gone,
 but a heart still beats inside

I would like to acknowledge and thank the faculty and fellows of University of Pittsburg Medical Center St Margaret, faculty development fellowship for their guidance and support in promoting reflective thinking.

This article was externally peer reviewed.

Submitted 12 May 2008; revised 21 August 2008; accepted 25 August 2008.

From the Family Medicine Residency Program, Western Reserve Care System, Youngstown, Ohio.

Funding: none.

Conflict of interest: none declared.

Corresponding author: Vikram Arora, MD, MPH, Family Medicine Program, Western Reserve Care System, 500 Gypsy Lane, Youngstown, Ohio 44501 doi:10.3122/jabfm.2009.02.080095 (E-mail: varora76@yahoo.com).