Felodipine was not carcinogenic when fed to mice at doses of up to 23.1 mg/kg (28 times the maximum recommended human dose on a mg/m² basis) and rats at doses of up to 138.6 mg/kg (230 times the maximum recommended human dose on a mg/m² basis). The incidence of tumors in the highest dose group exceeded historical controls. In a two-year carcinogenicity study in rats fed felodipine at doses of 2.3 mg/kg (4 times' the maximum recommended human dose on a mg/m² basis) and 11 mg/kg (20 times' the maximum recommended human dose on a mg/m² basis), the tumors that occurred in felodipine-treated rats were not considered drug-related.

The results of this study indicate that felodipine does not cause tumors in rats or mice at doses up to 138.6 mg/kg (230 times' the maximum recommended human dose on a mg/m² basis) and 11 mg/kg (20 times' the maximum recommended human dose on a mg/m² basis) respectively.

It is important to note that while felodipine is not carcinogenic in rats and mice, it is not possible to predict with certainty whether felodipine will increase the risk of tumors in humans. However, the study results suggest that felodipine may not increase the risk of tumors in humans.

DOSAGE AND ADMINISTRATION

In general, doses above 10 mg should not be considered in these patients.

Heart Failure: Although acute hemodynamic studies in a small number of patients with NYHA Class II or III heart failure treated with felodipine, felodipine did not produce significant negative inotropic effects, safety in patients with heart failure has not been established. Caution should be exercised when using PLENDIL in patients with heart failure. The effects of felodipine on cardiac function, particularly in combination with a beta blocker.

Elderly Patients or Patients with Impaired Liver Function: Patients over 65 years of age who are treated with felodipine have elevated plasma concentrations of felodipine and may therefore respond to lower doses of PLENDIL. These patients should have their blood pressure monitored closely during dosage adjustment of PLENDIL and should only require doses above 10 mg. (See CLINICAL PHARMACOLOGY and DOSAGE AND ADMINISTRATION sections of complete prescribing information.)

Peripheral Edema: Peripheral edema, generally mild and not associated with generalized fluid retention, was the most common adverse event in patients treated with PLENDIL. Although fluid retention was generally not seen at doses of 10 mg once a day, it was noted in patients treated with doses of 20 mg once a day. However, the effects of felodipine on peripheral edema were not severe and were not associated with generalized fluid retention.

Other Adverse Reactions: Other adverse reactions observed in controlled trials of felodipine were mild, but they were occasionally reported. These reactions included diarrhea, headache, rhinitis, and sinusitis. These adverse reactions were generally mild and did not require discontinuation of therapy.
